Dear Crystal Atwell,

Since I have started my Pharmacy School my only goal is to gain skills and knowledge to work in the Pharmaceutical Industry and give my contribution in developing new drugs. Before entering Pharmacy School, I have worked 10+ years in retail pharmacy and 1 year in the inpatient hospital setting as a Pharmacy Technicians. During my work experience I have learned a lot about drugs and each time I see a new drug come into market I was always interested to learn more about it and try reading the package insert. As a Pharmacy Technician there were a lot of things that did not make sense to me because of my limited knowledge about Pharmacokinetics and Pharmaceutics. Now after almost completing my Pharmacy School education those things are clicking in my mind as missing pieces of puzzles. It is very encouraging to learn more and gain higher knowledge of pharmaceutical research development. To fulfill this craving for knowledge I have applied to the Master of Science program in which I will be able to conduct research with the experts and learn from them the core of drug development and techniques.

As I have mentioned above my interest in accessing the knowledge of drug development the APhA APPE rotation will provide me with even more insight of Pharmacy core values and goals as APhA is considered as a base of Pharmacy professionals. I was very intrigued with the information provided on the APhA website about this APPE rotation and how it will provide me the skills of effective communication and evaluation and analyzing different information as it mentions:

- 1) Gain an understanding of the mission, goals and objectives, organizational structure, programs and services of the American Pharmacists Association.
- 2) Participate in appropriate staff and leadership meetings of the Association occurring during the experiential opportunity.
- 3) Identify and analyze high priority issues in pharmacy practice.
- 4) Develop skills in verbal and written communication, information gathering, evaluation, and analysis for use in specific organizational areas.

I appreciate your consideration of me as a candidate, who can achieve a lot more from this rotation experience and work in our community utilizing the values of APhA.

Sincerely,
Harmanjit Kaur (Harman)
